Sir John Pettus, Fodinae Regales (1670); ref. in R. Hunt, Mem. Geol. Surv. Vol. II, Pt. 2, 635 (1848). "And Cimboline, Prince of the Trinobantes (wherein Essex is included), who had lived much at Rome in Augustus his time, was seated at Walden in that countie, and did (according to the Roman way) coin monie instead of rings, which might be from that mine which was afterwards discovered in Henry IV. his time in that countie." R.H. comments - This is not strictly true, the mine in Essex never having been discovered. Henry IV commanded Walter Fitz Walter (upon information of a concealed mine of gold in Essex) to apprehend all persons that do conceal the said mine...
